History

Brookwood Labor College in Katonah, New York was founded in 1921 as an experimental college for labor specific classes. It was a residential college different from traditional colleges. It only lasted until 1937 when it fell victim to the depression. Brookwood was founded by a group of several labor activists beginning with William Mann Fincke who donated his 53 acres and large colonial farmhouse in Katonah, New York for the college's location and Evelyn Preston, from the League of Women Shoppers, donated $50,000 for a Women's dormitory. Its biggest supporter, however, was the AFL (American Federation of Labor) unions. The short survival of the college was reliant on union scholarships and donors or "angels" as Brookwood staff referred to them. After A.J. Muste left in 1933 the college slowly started to lose financial support as well as dwindling numbers of students and had to close finally in 1937.
