

THE UAW REGION 7 - TORONTO SUB-REGIONAL OFFICE COLLECTION

82 Manuscript Boxes

Processed: December, 1968

Accession No. 296

By: LHH

The papers of the Toronto Sub-Regional Collection were deposited with the Labor History Archives by the former Sub-Regional Director, Dennis McDermott.

The papers of this collection pertain to the Toronto office of the United Automobile Workers. For organizational purposes, the UAW is divided into eighteen regions, seventeen of which are in the United States. Toronto is one of the major sub-regional offices of Region Seven, the Canadian region of the UAW. The other major sub-regional offices are located in Brantford; Chatham; Fort William; London; Montreal; Oakville; Oshawa; Ottawa; Sarnia; St. Catharines; Winnipeg; and Woodstock.

The Canadian subsidiaries of the U.S. Auto plants caught the spirit of organization during the General Motors and Chrysler sit-down strikes of 1937, and the international union made a special effort to organize its workers in Canada. In 1940, George Burt was elected Director of Region 7 which maintains its headquarters in Windsor. The Toronto sub-regional office was established in 1942, and Paul Siren was its director until January, 1960. Dennis McDermott succeeded him. When George Burt retired in 1968, McDermott was elected Director of Region 7.

The collection covers the period from 1941 to 1968.

Series 2 District Council 26, 1942-1965
4 Manuscript Boxes

Minutes of Meetings, Reports of the Regional Director, Constitution, a few miscellaneous reports, and a few items of Correspondence.

District Council 26 was established in 1942 by the local unions to recommend policy measures to the director of Region Seven and to discuss questions of general interest to the membership of the local unions. The membership of the District Council consists of members of local unions who are elected to the Council. The regional director and the international representatives are excluded from voting unless they are chosen as a delegate from their local union. A meeting of the District Council is held at least once every four months.

The records of this series are divided into two sections. The records of section one - minutes of meetings and Reports of the Regional Director - are arranged chronologically. The records of section two consist of seven folders of miscellaneous items. These records are arranged alphabetically.

Series 7 Labor-Management Disputes Settled by Government Agencies, 1941-1966
20 Manuscript Boxes

Correspondence, and legal forms of application, certification, conciliation, and intervention. Some legal briefs and formal decisions. Published decisions of the War Labour Board and the Ontario Labour Relations Board.

The records in this series pertain to labor-management bargaining and wage disputes which were settled by administrative agencies of the government - the War Labour Board and the Ontario Labour Relations Board. The records have been divided into four sections.

The records of section one pertain to cases presented to the War Labour Board. The War Labour Board was established in 1941 to enforce a government policy of placing a definite ceiling on wages of war industry and of allowing an escalator system to compensate workers for changes for the cost of living. The records of this section pertain to only seven cases, 1941-45, which are arranged alphabetically by name of the company. The name of the company and the dates are listed on each folder.

The records of section two pertain to cases presented to the Ontario Labour Relations Board, 1945-1968.

In the spring session of 1943, the provincial legislature of Ontario passed the Collective Bargaining Act which made collective bargaining compulsory. In 1944, the legislature enacted the Ontario Labour Relations Board Act which established the Ontario Labour Relations Board to regulate the collective bargaining relations between the unions and the employers. The act provides that a union which has as members a majority of the employees of a respective employer as bargaining unit is entitled to be certified by the Labour Relations Board as the bargaining agent for that unit.

Following certification, the union is required to notify the employer in writing of its desire to bargain for the purpose of making a collective agreement. If the negotiations become deadlocked, either party may request that conciliation services be made available. If the request is granted, the Minister of Labour appoints a conciliation officer to confer with the parties and to try to effect an agreement. If his efforts prove unsuccessful, the minister may appoint a Conciliation Board consisting of two members nominated by the respective parties and a neutral chairman. Strikes and lockouts are forbidden until this Conciliation process is exhausted.

The Labour Relations Board may terminate the bargaining rights of a union if another union is certified as the bargaining agent or if the Board decides that the union no longer represents the majority of the employees in its unit.

The records of section two are arranged alphabetically by name of company. The name of the company, the nature of the case -certification, conciliation or intervention (action to determine status of bargaining rights) - and the dates are listed on each folder.

The records of section three are decisions of the Ontario Labour Relations Board pertaining to cases of other unions. The folders are arranged alphabetically by name of union.

The records of section four are decisions of the Ontario Labour Relations Board pertaining to cases of individuals. They are arranged alphabetically.

At the end of the series, there are two loose leaf notebooks containing published decisions of the National War Labour Board and the Ontario Labour Relations Board, 1943-1947.
