The records of UAW Region 6 were placed in the Archives of Labor and Urban Affairs in 1972 by Al Haene and were opened for research in March of 1986.

Region 6 is the western region of the UAW, comprising the states of California, Arizona, Idaho, Nevada, Oregon, Utah, Washington, Alaska and Hawaii. Its headquarters has been in the Los Angeles area since the early 1950's.

The first official UAW organizer sent to California by the International Executive Board was Richard Coleman in November of 1936. Los Angeles area Local 188 and Bay Area Local 76 had already been chartered and strikes were in progress at Douglas, Santa Monica and Northrup. He concentrated his first efforts on the West Coast auto industry and hired Charlie West and Charles Rogers to help in organizing. The first locals chartered were 215 at Willys Overland in Los Angeles, 216 at GM South Gate, and 406 at Ford Long Beach.

Organizing increased in aircraft as the industry grew with defense preparations and aircraft workers sought to gain parity with auto workers. The UAW found itself in competition with the IAM and also faced severe anti-union attitudes on the part of aircraft employers.

Irvan Carey became director of the Western Region, as it was then called, in late 1937. When the UAW IEB formally established geographic regions, regional offices and directors in their May, 1938 meeting, the Western Region became Region 6 with California, Arizona, Utah, Washington, Nevada, Oregon and Idaho included in its jurisdiction.

When R.J. Thomas replaced Homer Martin in 1939, Carey was expelled from the Union and a committee of District Council 5 assumed temporary directorship of the region. Lew Michener, who served on the committee, became director later in the year.

Aircraft organizing accelerated during the prewar period, often accompanied by strikes. The most notable of these strikes was that at North American Aviation at Inglewood, where 11,000 workers organized into Local 683 walked out because the War Labor Board refused to meet their wage demands. Richard T. Frankenstein, who represented the UAW, was unable to persuade the workers to return to work in his famous "bean field speech." After nine days, President Roosevelt ordered U.S. Army troops to seize the plant and wage increases were negotiated. Local 683 was dissolved and replaced in July 1941 by Local 887. Michener faced charges at the 1941 convention and was disqualified from running for election to. Jack Montgomery was elected director and served until 1943 when Michener was again elected to the position. When Michener entered military service in December, 1944, Cyril V. O'Halloran replaced him. O'Halloran served as director until 1955, when Charles Bioletti was elected to the office.

With the contraction of the aircraft industry in the 1950's, membership diminished, but by the end of the decade, there was renewed activity in the Anaheim area. Membership increased to about 65,000 workers in some thirty-two locals by 1965. In 1962 a call for a 60-day moratorium by President Kennedy was needed to avert a strike at North American Aviation, where negotiations had stalled over the issue of the union shop.

Paul H. Schrade, longterm president of Local 887, became regional director in 1962. Later that year Region 6 absorbed Alaska and Hawaii into its jurisdiction. Schrade's administration saw increased participation of the regional office in a wide range of causes, including involvement with COPE and voter registration drives. The most notable activity in this area was the UAW's strong support of the United Farm Workers under Cesar Chavez.

Schrade was defeated for reelection in 1972 and succeeded by R. Jerry Whipple as director. Whipple served until January 1973, when he resigned and was replaced by Bruce A. Lee.

The UAW Region 6 Collection includes regional office files from the early 1940's through the 1960's, encompassing the administrations of directors Cyril O'Halloran, Charles Bioletti and Paul Schrade.
