History

Mark Starr was born in Somerset, England, in 1894. At age 13, he began working as a builder's mortar boy and less than a year later got a job as a coal miner, which he kept for seven years. After graduating from London Labour College in 1920, he taught university courses in history and economics. Starr came to the United States in 1928 and went to work for Brookwood Labor College as extension director. In 1932, he married Helen Grosvenor Norton, a fellow lecturer at Brookwood College, and he became an American citizen in 1937. In 1935, the International Ladies Garment Workers Union hired him as director of its Educational Department, where he remained until 1960, publishing pamphlets and articles on workers' education and labor history. Between 1940 and 1942 he was vice-president of the American Federation of Teachers. Starr ran for a seat on New York's City Council in 1945 as a Liberal Party candidate, but lost, and also that year was a member of the US delegation to the first UNESCO Conference in London. In the early 1960s, Starr travelled for the International Labour Office to Singapore, Tanganyika (now Tanzania), and Uganda gathering information about labor in those countries and training labor leaders how to organize effectively. In the mid-1970s, Starr taught labor studies at Rutgers University. Among the books he authored are two high school textbooks: "Labor and the American Way" and "Labor in America." He died on April 24, 1985.
