Abstract:	The Society of Women Engineers is a non-profit educational service organization, founded in 1950 as the first organization dedicated to the career guidance, advancement, and recognition of women engineers. The organization's national records exemplify the struggle women have faced over time, gaining entrance into a male dominated discipline and bear witness to the triumphs and honors women have enjoyed as engineering students and practicing professionals. While documenting the Society itself, and giving insight into women's organizations in the twentieth-century U.S., they also provide a look at evolving scientific and technical challenges, the changing climate in the engineering profession, and the history of women in the workforce. Specifically, the records document the origins, operations, entities, programs and activities of SWE, from its inception, and the accomplishments of its members.

History

The origins of the Society of Women Engineers (SWE) lie in student groups organized at Drexel Institute of Technology in Philadelphia and Cooper Union and City College of New York in New York City in the late 1940s. Increased defense spending and a shortage of men during World War II had provided unprecedented educational and employment opportunities for women engineers. As a result, female graduate engineers began organizing local meetings and networking activities in order to exchange information and address mutual concerns.

On May 27-28, 1950, about fifty women representing the four original districts or sections — metropolitan New York City, Philadelphia, Washington, D. C., and Boston — attended the first "national convention" of the Society of Women Engineers at Green Engineering Camp of the Cooper Union in New Jersey and elected Dr. Beatrice A. Hicks president. Over the next three years, the Chicago, Pittsburgh, Detroit, and Los Angeles sections were chartered.

Even though there was a shortage of engineers in the 1950s, it wasn't until the 1960s, after Sputnik had intensified the United States government's commitment to technological research and development, that engineering schools began opening their doors to women; SWE membership doubled to 1,200 and the organization moved its headquarters into the newly constructed United Engineering Center in New York City.

Over the next decade, an increasing number of young women chose engineering as a profession, but few were able to rise to management-level positions. SWE inaugurated a series of conferences (dubbed the Henniker Conferences after the meeting site in New Hampshire) on the status of women in engineering and in 1973, signed an agreement with the National Society of Professional Engineers in hopes of recruiting a larger percentage of working women and students to its ranks.

At the same time, SWE increasingly became involved in the spirit and activities of the larger women's movement. In 1972, a number of representatives from women's scientific and technical committees and societies (including SWE) met to form an alliance and discuss equity for women in science and engineering. This inaugural meeting eventually led to the formation of the Federation of Organizations of Professional Women (FOPW). In addition, SWE's Council resolved in 1973 to endorse ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment, and a few years later, resolved not to hold national conventions in non-ERA-ratified states.

By 1982, the Society had swelled to 13,000 graduate and student members spread out in 250 sections across the country. The Council of Section Representatives, which in partnership with an Executive Committee had governed the Society since 1959, had become so large SWE adopted a regionalization plan designed to bring the leadership closer to the membership. Going into the 21st century, SWE comprised over 17,000 student, graduate and corporate members, in ten regions and over 100 professional and 300 student sections. It continues its mission as a 501(c)(3) non-profit educational service organization.

Scope and Content

SWE National Records document the origins, operations, entities, programs and activities of the Society of Women Engineers, from its inception as the first society dedicated to the advancement of women in engineering. It includes correspondence, minutes, reports, speeches, biographies, articles, clippings, and statistics, among other records.

Materials found in the collection, especially those in the Headquarters, Conferences, Committees, and Awards series, reflect one of the Society's key objectives to offer career guidance to encourage women to enter or return to the engineering profession and to attain high levels of educational and professional achievement. Also documented are SWE's attempts to publicize the role of women in engineering, to place them in engineering jobs and to promote them in industry and professional circles. Evidence of SWE's relationships with other engineering and women's organizations, as well as the engineering industry, to promote equal opportunities and equal rights for women can primarily be found in the Governance, Officers, and Headquarters series.

The strength of SWE lies in its membership and grassroots organizations. The lives and achievements of individual members as well as some prominent women engineers are well documented in the biographical files in Series XI. The operation and activities of SWE on a local level are reflected in Series VIII: Regions, Sections, and Students Sections. While the SWE National Records do not provide the entire picture of local involvement, they do give a good idea of the breadth of activities conducted by a majority of its local entities. Programs, meeting minutes, flyers, charters, and correspondence from hundreds of SWE sections and student sections can be found in this series. Well documented is the regionalization of the sections in the early 1980s, an important event in the growth and governance of the society.

SWE has also prided itself on serving as a center of information on women in engineering. The Subject Files series reflects this through clippings, brochures, papers, conference programs, and articles on a myriad of subjects relative to women in engineering, both directly related to SWE and of general interest to its membership. SWE's records while documenting the society itself, and giving insight into women's organizations in the twentieth-century U.S., also provide a look at evolving scientific and technical challenges, the changing climate in the engineering profession, and the history of women in the workforce.
