Abstract:	Part 1 of the AFSCME Public Policy Analysis Department Records focuses on Deinstitutionalization, particularly at Wayne County General Hospital (WCGH). The hospital complex was located in western Wayne County, Michigan, approximately 16 miles west of downtown Detroit. Deinstitutionalization represented a major change in philosophy for mental health treatment delivery and was the term given to the process whereby mentally ill patients were moved out of large public hospitals and into smaller community-based treatment facilities. Typically, large public (state) hospitals were then closed. The process began in 1955 with the introduction of new psychiatric medications by the National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH) into state hospitals. These new medicines offered the possibility of less-restrictive care for the mentally ill outside of the inpatient hospital setting. The deinstitutionalization trend accelerated after the passage of the Community Mental Health Centers Act in 1963 and then continued throughout the 1970's and 1980's. Part 2 of the AFSCME Public Policy Analysis Department Records consists of material related to AFSCME's national effort to affect public policy in federal, state, and local governments during the 1970s. The department conducted research on issues with the potential to impact AFSCME members, especially matters of Social Security, cost of living, pensions, healthcare, deinstitutionalization, public health care, and unemployment. From this research, the Public Policy Analysis Department created reports and studies meant to influence the policy created by government agencies. The bulk of Part 2 of this collection

represents AFSCME's work in the debate on deinstitutionalization and health care reform efforts between 1973 and 1978. Part 3 of the AFSCME Public Policy Analysis Department Records contains correspondence, memos, reports, data, news articles, studies, speeches, and testimonies. Large portions of the records pertain to mental health and deinstitutionalization. Other topics covered include taxes, Reagan-era budget cuts, and other economic issues.

History

The AFSCME Department of Public Policy Analysis was active in the 1970's in reviewing, analyzing, and influencing public policy and legislation that could directly or indirectly affect the livelihoods of AFSCME members. The Department looked at areas such as state and national legislation, state and national economic conditions, mental health care worker issues, and deinstitutionalization. This resulted in correspondence with AFSCME members, state and national governmental agencies, and health organizations along with the issuance of reports, studies, resolutions, and statements concerning various subjects of importance to the AFSCME membership.

The main subject of this collection is deinstitutionalization. Deinstitutionalization represented a major change in philosophy for mental health treatment delivery and was the term given to the process where mentally ill patients were moved out of large public hospitals and into smaller community-based treatment facilities. Typically, the large public (state) hospitals were then closed. The process began in 1955 with the introduction of new psychiatric medications by the National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH) into state hospitals. These new medicines offered the possibility of less-restrictive care for the mentally ill outside of the inpatient hospital setting. The deinstitutionalization trend accelerated after the passage of the Community Mental Health Centers Act in 1963 and then continued throughout the 1970's and 1980's. According to a 1995 PBS FRONTLINE report entitled, The New Asylums, "approximately 92 percent of the people who would have been living in public psychiatric hospitals in 1955 were not living there in 1994."

In the late 1970's, AFSCME represented over 1 million workers in various civil service jobs throughout the United States. Of that number, over 250,000 members were employed in mental health care facilities that were operated by state and local governments as well as by private agencies. The deinstitutionalization trend was of concern to AFSCME since it came to affect members' job security and working conditions as well as patient care. Although AFSCME was originally a supporter of deinstitutionalization, it became a leading critic of the policy when it was becoming apparent that patient needs were not being met. This is described in the independent study, Out of Their Beds and Into the Streets, which was commissioned by AFSCME and published in 1976.

This collection documents the history of one institution in particular: Wayne County General Hospital (WCGH). The hospital complex was located north of Michigan Avenue and east of Merriman Road in western Wayne County, Michigan, approximately 16 miles west of downtown Detroit. The first County house was built at this site in 1846 to provide lodging for the homeless and poor. The complex was often referred to as “Eloise” which was the name of the post office that was established at the growing facility in 1894. According to Detroit’s Hospitals, Healers, and Helpers by Patricia Ibbotson, the “complex stood on 902 acres of land, complete with about 70 buildings” and “Eloise was unique because Wayne County was the only one of Michigan’s 83 counties that operated a psychiatric hospital, a general hospital, and an infirmary division all at the same place” (2004, pp. 85-86).

Although the WCGH was a large and long-established institution, it was not immune to the same negative financial pressures that were affecting other public hospitals throughout the country by the early 1970’s. A task force was formed by the Wayne County Board of Commissioners in June, 1972, in order to study hospital finance sources, governance, services, community needs, and relationships with nearby medical schools. Due to a growing financial crisis at WCGH, a second task force was formed by the Wayne County Board of Commissioners in early 1977. The products of these two task forces are included in this collection.

Part 1: The Health and Mental Health series of this collection includes some correspondence and reports related to health and mental health care issues such as nursing homes, home health services, patient rights, health care worker protections, health care worker training, mental health laws, hospital staffing, and community support programs.

The Health Organizations series includes some limited correspondence with and/or information about various national organizations that were involved with health and mental health issues.

Another series covers the National Economy and State and Local Finance Issues. This series includes correspondence, reports, articles, and other information concerning subjects such as the federal budget, inflation, tax reform, energy, wage and price controls, and the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act of 1978 (CETA).

The collection also includes a series concerning task forces which were formed in 1972 and 1977 to resolve administrative and financial problems at the Wayne County General Hospital (WCGH) at Eloise (located in western Wayne County, Michigan, approximately 16 miles west of downtown Detroit). This series provides some insights into the problems that large urban public hospitals such as WCGH were facing as a result of deinstitutionalization.

The Briefings, Speeches, and Testimonies series includes a selection of Briefing Books that AFSCME Department of Public Policy Analysis prepared in 1979. The books offer discussion and analysis of a variety of important national economic issues. This series also includes several AFSCME International Executive Board (IEB) reports and transcripts of speeches/testimonies that were given by various AFSCME national and state directors.
