The Detroit Symphony Orchestra (DSO) grew out of a meeting of ten young women on January 8, 1914 at the home of Mrs. Alexander Sibley. To provide Detroit with culture, the women raised money for the first concert of the DSO presented on November 19, 1914. One of the orchestra's first music directors, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, demanded the DSO have a permanent home to give it a greater sense of professionalism. Designed by C. Howard Crane and built in 1919, Orchestra Hall served this purpose until 1956, when Henry and Edsel Ford Auditorium opened. The DSO returned to Orchestra Hall in 1989 because of its excellent acoustics.

The DSO not only performs regular subscription concerts and special concerts at its home, but also a series of Young People's Concerts and school concerts, outstate and national tour concerts, free concerts, mid-season festivals as well as the summer Meadow Brook Music Festival, radio broadcasts, and recordings. In 1979 the DSO made its first trip to Europe. The DSO also operates the Detroit Symphony Civic Orchestra, a pre-professional youth training orchestra.

The papers of Detroit Symphony Orchestra Hall, Inc. consist of correspondence, minutes, printed material, programs, reports, clippings, press releases and financial records related to the administration, marketing and public relations of the DSO. The papers also reflect the orchestra's community outreach and cultural activities and the influence of Music Directors, Paul Paray, Sixten Endering, Antal Dorati, Gunther Herbig and Neeme Jarvi.
