History

Leonard Norman Rashall Simons was born in Youngstown, Ohio, on July 24, 1904, the son of William Rashall and Minna Williams Rashall (later Simons). He married Harriette Lieberman in 1930, and they had two daughters, Susan Simons and Mary Lou Simons (Zieve). He attended Central High School in Detroit. Simons spent his career as an advertising executive, including serving as vice-president of the Simons Michelson Zieve Advertising Agency in Troy, Michigan, from 1977 to 1995. He was a partner in the investment company Simons-Michelson Company, also in Troy, Michigan, from 1929-1977. Simons served as advertising director for the U.S. Treasury War Bonds during World War II.

Simons led and served on the boards of many organizations, including Temple Beth El in Detroit/Bloomfield Hills; Wayne State University Press; Michigan Cancer Foundation; Detroit Historical Commission; United Negro College Fund, Michigan; Sinai Hospital of Detroit; and the Greater Detroit Interfaith Round Table of Christians and Jews. Simons was an active fundraiser for many causes both secular and religious, ranging from educational to medical to social service. During his lifetime, Simons received many awards, among them the Prime Minister's Medal from the State of Israel, the Jewish Federation of Metropolitan Detroit Butzel Award, and the United Community Foundation Heart of Gold Award. He was decorated as a Chevalier dans l'Ordre Nationale du Merite by the French government. The building housing the Wayne State University Press in Detroit is named in Simons's honor.

Simons maintained an active focus on his family life and his friendships. He was an avid traveler, which is reflected in his vast correspondence and a serious collector of rare books. His collection of rare Michigan history books is now part of the Special Collections in the Wayne State University Library System. Simons died on November 16, 1995.
