In November, 1868, seven members of the Ladies' Christian Union opened the Woman's Hospital and Foundlings' Home in a tenement at Cass Avenue and Montcalm Street, a private, non-profit institution and the first facility in Detroit dedicated to providing care and shelter for abandoned, widowed and unwed mothers and their babies. The hospital's Board of Trustees was comprised entirely of women as was its staff of resident physicians. A male Board of Counsel acted in an advisory capacity.

In 1929, the new, much larger Woman's Hospital opened on the block surrounded by Forest, Hancock, Beaubien and Brush Streets. During the Depression, financial exigencies forced the hospital to admit men and begin offering general medical and surgical services, while still specializing in obstetrics and gynecology.

During its long history, Woman's Hospital inaugurated several revolutionary social service programs for indigent women and their children, beginning with the creation of the Open Door Department (later the Social Services Department) to rehabilitate female prisoners discharged from the Detroit House of Correction and provide vocational training, enabling them to find employment and support their children.

In 1965, Woman's Hospital changed its name to Hutzel Hospital, in honor of Eleonore Hutzel, director of Social Services from 1915 and a board member with a record of service spanning fifty years. The following year, an ambitious building and remodeling program was completed and the Board of Trustees voted to admit men to its membership.

Woman's Hospital has always devoted itself to research into the diseases of women. When the hospital established the Grace Whitney Hoff Research Laboratory in 1909, it was the only laboratory in Michigan to specialize in the diseases of women and children. Hutzel Hospital is now part of the Detroit Medical Center, working with other hospitals and Wayne State University Medical School to provide high quality medical care to the Detroit community.

The Hutzel Hospital Collection consists of correspondence, minutes, reports, clippings, publicity, biographical information on various directors and board members and other material documenting the history of women's health care in Detroit.
