Abstract:	Incorporated as the Jewish Old Folks Home in 1907 to provide housing for the homeless and those who no longer could maintain their homes, the Jewish Home for the Aged was at one time a state-of-the-art facility in the heart of the Detroit Jewish community. After expansion to the northwest suburbs with two full-scale nursing homes, financial and management difficulties in the 1980s led to contraction of services. The majority of the records of the Home cover the creation and operation of the facilities, with an emphasis on events that occurred in the 1980s.

History

On June 10, 1907, members of the Anshe Chesed Shel Emeth, a Jewish burial society, incorporated the Jewish Old Folks Home to provide housing for the homeless and those who could no longer maintain their own homes and wished to live in a facility that observed kashrut, the Jewish dietary laws. A house was purchased at Brush and Winder Streets in Detroit as the facility, and in 1915 the organization moved to larger quarters at Brush and Edmund Streets, in the heart of the Jewish community.

In 1931 the Jewish Old Folks Home affiliated with the Jewish Welfare Federation, and in 1933 the group changed its name to the Jewish Home for the Aged. In 1937 a state-of-the-art facility was built on Petoskey Street in Detroit with Ira Sonneblick, a nationally known gerontologist, as director. Services expanded to include sophisticated physical and occupational therapy and recreational opportunities. When medical needs increased, the Home developed an infirmary and ambulatory services.

As Detroit's Jewish population moved northwest, Borman Hall, a modern facility that included married housing, opened in 1968 on Seven Mile Road and Sutherland Street. In 1971 Prentis Manor, an existing nursing home in Southfield, was acquired. These facilities became full-scale nursing homes. Facilities for the well elderly were also needed. The Fleischman Residence, on the grounds of the Jewish Community Center in West Bloomfield, accommodated this group of people.

Beginning in the mid 1980s, financial and management difficulties plagued the Home. The cost of running a full-service nursing facility escalated, and problems arose with nursing care. In 1995 the Jewish Home from the Aged relinquished its ability to provide skilled nursing care and sold Borman Hall and Prentis Manor.
