Abstract:	The Detroit Academy of Medicine was first organized on September 21, 1869, in part as an outgrowth of the establishment of the Detroit Medical College in 1868. Its object was the development of closer professional and social relationships between members of the medical profession in Detroit. It's membership was kept small in the interest of promoting easily assembled gatherings where all could have a chance to speak and present, and the organization did not seek to encompass the whole of the Detroit medical community. Nevertheless, it remained the only medical association in Detroit until 1876. Members of the Academy viewed the organization as a means of securing the professional and intellectual development necessary to conduct the affairs of the new medical school, and were also strong believers in the value of a more extensive education – one of their major activities was the sharing of significant papers and case studies. In 2005, the Detroit Academy of Medicine merged with another medical association, the Detroit Medical Club (founded 1906) in order to form a new, larger association called the Detroit Medical Academy that is still in existence today. The contents of this collection cover the period between 1869 and 2014, with the bulk of material falling between 1902 and 1989. The records include the Academy's constitution, bylaws, proposed amendments, correspondence, membership roles and member files, meeting minutes and invitations, scrapbooks, and other historical data. Also included are records from the Detroit Medical Club, and from the

Detroit Medical Academy that was formed by the two organizations' merger.
