The Detroit Revolutionary Movements Collection was placed in the Archives of Labor and Urban Affairs by General Gordon Baker and Ronald Glotta in January of 1978 and opened for research in December of 1979. Additional material was received from Mr. Glotta in March of 1981 and opened in March of 1982 as Part 2 of the collection.

Series I of this collection consists of the papers donated by General Baker, who worked in Chrysler Corporation's Dodge Main Plant. They are mainly concerned with the Dodge Revolutionary Union Movement (DRUM) and the League of Revolutionary Black Workers (LRBW).

Series II is comprised of papers donated by Ronald Glotta, a Detroit attorney. These papers relate to the Eldon Revolutionary Union Movement (ELRUM) at Chrysler's Eldon Avenue plant and other Revolutionary Union Movement groups; workmen's compensation cases; social service workers' organizing activities in Detroit; the National Lawyers Guild; the Motor City Labor League; the Control, Conflict, Change Book Club; and mass party movements in Detroit and elsewhere, particularly the Communist League and Communist Labor Party.

Ronald Glotta's law firm, Glotta, Adelman and Dinges, was established with a revolutionary objective. The members actively participate in the revolutionary groups which they counsel and represent in arbitration and in the courts.

A list of acronyms for the numerous institutions and organizations covered in the collection will be found on page 4. Pertinent historical information, series descriptions and lists of major correspondents and subjects are provided individually for each series and/or subseries. An index to correspondents in this collection is located at the end of the finding aid.

Further information on black radical groups active in the 1960's and 1970's may be found in the Dan Georgakas Collection.

Part 1

Series I, Dodge Revolutionary Union Movement (DRUM), 1968-1972,
Box 1:
  Papers, mainly handbills and policy statements, donated by General Baker dating from the formation of DRUM at the Chrysler Corporation Dodge Main plant, Hamtramck, Michigan, in 1968. There is some material on elections in which DRUM candidates ran for UAW posts and also some on the League of Revolutionary Black Workers.

Series II, Boxes 2-15:
  Series II consists of papers donated by Ronald Glotta. This series is divided into six subseries by subject.

  Subseries A: Chrysler Eldon (ELRUM) and Other Revolutionary
  Union Movements, 1967-1975, Boxes 2-5:
  Papers, mainly flyers, open letters, legal papers, meeting notes,
grievances, plant files, and correspondence relating to the activities of ELRUM at the Chrysler Eldon Avenue plant, DRUM at the Dodge Main plant, and Revolutionary Union Movement groups at other plants. There is also material on the Eldon Workers Safety Committee and Chrysler Eldon UAW Local 961 elections from 1971-73.

  Subseries B: Workmen's Compensation and Social Service
  Workers, 1970-1975, Box 5:
  Papers on workmen's compensation, specifically the case of James Johnson. It also covers attempts to organize social service workers in the Detroit area in the early seventies. This subseries consists mainly of handbills, newsletters and some correspondence.

  Subseries C: National Lawyers Guild - 1963-1974, Boxes 6-7:
  Mainly correspondence and reports relating to the National Lawyers Guild during the period 1963-74. There is material on the Detroit chapter, the NLG Labor Committee and the 1972 Detroit National Labor Conference.

  Subseries D: Motor City Labor League and Control, Conflict, Change Book Club, 1970-1976, Boxes 8-11:
  These papers, mainly correspondence, policy statements and reports concern the Motor City Labor League and the Control, Conflict, Change Book Club. The majority of the reports deal with specific topics. There is also material on MCLL factional disputes.
Subseries E: New Mass Party Movements, 1970-1976, Boxes 12-14: These papers are concerned with attempts in the early seventies to form a mass party to replace the Communist Party USA. Most of the material is in the form of policy statements, reports, meeting notes and correspondence and relates to Detroit unemployment, the Communist League and the Communist Labor Party.

Subseries F: Other Organizations, Box 15: This subseries consists of papers and literature from a variety of groups, predominantly those with a radical objective.

Part 2

Series III, Communist Labor Party, 1975-1980, Box 16: Papers, mainly newsletters and publicity items, relating to the activities of the Communist Labor Party in promoting a variety of causes and agitating for improved working conditions in a number of industries and occupational groups. There is also material on the election campaigns of General Baker for Michigan state representative in 1976 and 1978.

Series IV, Publications, 1968-1970s, Box 17
Newsletters, pamphlets, newspapers, and magazines

Non-manuscript material
A few photographs received with the collection have been transferred to the Archives Audiovisual Collection.

Copies
The records were microfilmed in 2012 and are now available on 17 reels. Both positive and negative reels are retained by the Reuther Library.

The Dodge Revolutionary Union Movement was formed in May, 1968 at the Chrysler Dodge Main Plant in Hamtramck, Michigan. Among those active in its founding were General Baker, Mike Hamlin, John Watson, Ron March, Luke S. Tripp, Jr., Kenneth Cockrel, John Williams and Charles J. Wooten, all of whom had previously been active in various radical and black rights organizations. John Watson and others from the group had, in the previous summer, founded the Inner City Voice, a black revolutionary newspaper with a Marxist-Leninist orientation.

DRUM was followed by other Revolutionary Union Movement groups formed at many of the automobile plants in Detroit, such as FRUM at Ford, ELRUM at the Eldon Avenue Chrysler plant, and JARUM at the company's Jefferson Avenue plant. RUMs were also organized at some non-auto businesses, such as UPRUM (United Parcel Service), HRUM (health workers) and NEWRUM (The Detroit News).

In the automobile plants, RUMs directed their protests against working conditions and against what they viewed as the racist policies of the manufacturers, who they claimed were giving the heaviest and most dangerous work to blacks and other minorities, like Arabs, and at the same time depriving them of opportunities to rise to more desirable and better-paying positions. They were equally critical of the UAW, which they saw as unresponsive to the grievances of black workers, reluctant to admit blacks into the union's official structure and in many cases, working with the employers to keep blacks in the most menial positions.

To gain attention for their demands, they used the technique of short wildcat strikes, they published plant newsletters detailing specific grievances they wanted corrected and they attempted to elect their members to offices in the UAW. They also staged marches and demonstrations. During the academic year 1968-69 Watson and Hamlin became editors of The South End, the student newspaper at Wayne State University, and it became a vehicle for their views. A complete set of The South End can be found in the Wayne State University Archives.

In 1969 the League of Revolutionary Black Workers (LRBW) was created as the central organization for the various RUM groups and as the headquarters for a nationwide revolutionary union movement. Factional infighting caused the League to split in 1971 and it subsequently declined in influence.
Series I consists of flyers, protest literature and other material relating to the formation and internal structure of DRUM and LRBW, the UAW Local 3 elections in which the DRUM candidates, Ron March and Don Jackson, ran and other radical groups.

This series is divided into the following subseries.

Subseries A: Chrysler Eldon (ELRUM) and Other Revolutionary Union Movements, 1967-1974, Boxes 2-5

There is considerable information on ELRUM's activities and also those of other dissidents at that plant. In general, the material deals with ELRUM's protests against Chrysler, charging discrimination against black workers and unsafe working conditions.

To a great extent the focus is on Jordan U. Sims who was not an ELRUM member, but who was one of the leaders of those alleging the plant had unsafe working conditions. He filed grievances against specific safety violations and stated that the UAW leadership of Local 961 at the Eldon Avenue Chrysler plant was not actively protecting employee interests. He was discharced in 1970 for participation in a work stoppage, but while appealing his discharge, he ran as candidate for president of the local in the disputed elections held from 1971 through 1973, when he was ultimately elected.

The Eldon Workers Safety Committee to which Sims belonged consisted mainly of ELRUM members who formed it to protest working conditions at the plant. They distributed flyers citing specific safety violations, organized work stoppages, and filed formal charges against the company. Their legal counsel was provided by Michael Adelman and Ronald Glotta. For their part in these protests, John Taylor, Alonso Chandler, Robert McKee and James Edwards were dismissed. Their subsequent attempts to gain reinstatement were unsuccessful. As a result of this and earlier firings of those involved in wildcat strikes, the strength of ELRUM leadership at Chrysler Eldon declined.

The balance of the material in this subseries is on the Chrysler Dodge Main plant and relates to DRUM activities there, particularly the disputed 1970 election in which Ron March was the unsuccessful DRUM candidate. There is also some information on other plants.

The papers in this subseries consist of correspondence, flyers, open letters, legal papers, meeting notes, grievances, and copies of plant files and UAW material. This subseries provides considerable information on the thinking of the revolutionaries and dissidents active in the automobile plants and also reveals a good deal about their organization and tactics. Reference materials related to this subseries are placed last.

Subseries B: Workmen’s Compensation and Social Service Workers, 1970-1975, Box 5

The Glotta, Adelman and Dinges firm was especially active in workmen's compensation cases. In a case which attracted considerable attention, Ronald Glotta successfully represented James Johnson, who had been institutionalized after shooting two foremen and a fellow worker at the Chrysler Eldon plant, in his claim for workmen's compensation. The files contain correspondence, clippings and news releases. In addition, there is material from a Michigan Trial Lawyers Association seminar on workmen’s compensation and articles on the subject.

Michael Adelman represented the Welfare Employees Union in their attempts to gain recognition as the bargaining agent for employees of the Wayne County Department of Social Services. The union felt that the Civil Service Commission opposed them because of their radical position. Adelman also represented the International Union of Civil Rights and Social Service Employees in a similar dispute. There is also material in this subseries from other unions interested in organizing social service workers. Mainly this subseries consists of newsletters and flyers distributed by the various organizing groups, but there is also some correspondence. General files regarding social service employees are placed first, followed by files relating to specific unions arranged alphabetically.

Ronald Glotta became an active member of the National Lawyers Guild, founded in 1937 and dedicated to radical social change, after his graduation from the University of Michigan Law School in 1966. Other members of the GAD firm also belonged and in 1972 they helped form the NLG's Labor Committee and organized a National Labor Conference held in Detroit, which was attended by many prominent New Left lawyers and labor lawyers. The objective of GAD in working within the NLG was to lead it into acceptance of the Marxist-Leninist positions of the Communist Labor Party rather than those of the Communist Party USA, which had been a strong influence within the Guild before the Congressional anti-Communist investigations of the 1950's caused it to decline in membership.

Meeting notes and minutes, correspondence, reports and publications document the activities of the Detroit chapter of the Guild in particular. The material gives much information on the GAD firm's view of its role as a revolutionary cadre, the work of the Labor Committee and the debate within the NLG over allowing membership to legal workers.

In this subseries, material pertinent to the national organization is placed first followed by that which concerns the Detroit chapter and the Labor Committee. This is followed by NLG publications and then by a series of reports on specific subjects, arranged alphabetically, and reference material. The last section is made up of material from other New Left legal groups and portions of a manuscript for Ann Fagan Ginger's The Relevant Lawyers.

Subseries D: Motor City Labor League and Control, Conflict, Change Book Club, 1970-1976, Boxes 8-11

The Motor City Labor League (MCLL) was founded in 1970 under the name Motor City Labor Coalition chiefly due to the efforts of Mike Hamlin, who wished to create an organization which would familiarize middle class whites and blacks with the LRBW and which would enlist their support and influence. It quickly attracted a considerable membership. Two existing organizations which assisted in its creation were Ad Hoc led by Sheila Murphy and People Against Racism led by Frank Joyce. Somewhat later a group called The Alliance merged with MCLL while continuing to maintain its independent identity. The MCLL, in turn, formed the Control, Conflict, Change Book Club (CCC), which also grew quickly and like the MCLL, had mainly a white membership. In 1974 the CCC was reorganized under the name Workers United for Political and Economic Survival (WUPES). From the outset the book club discussion forum was employed as a vehicle for educating the membership in Marxist-Leninist theory and to generate support for the LRBW. These discussions proved to be quite popular.

A difference in philosophy over endorsing local candidates such as Justin Ravitz and Kenneth Cockrel led to a split within the MCLL in 1972. Sheila Murphy and one quarter of the MCLL membership withdrew, and she founded a new organization, From the Ground Up, which also held book discussions and operated a bookstore. Those who remained in the MCLL felt that participation in the electoral process led only to reformism rather than the total revolution which they sought.

Members of the GAD law firm helped found the MCLL, and the firm helped them by providing resources such as copying equipment, meeting places and legal advice. Most of the members of the firm were affiliated with the Communist League, and in 1973 Ronald Glotta attempted to draw the MCLL into the Communist League, which precipitated another internal crisis. The MCLL and the CCC were criticized for diverting energy away from the LRBW by their various activities and in fact, MCLL survived after the dissolution of the LRBW.

Reports form the largest part of this subseries. They deal either with internal matters or were prepared as presentations on books or specific topics or are records of the discussion sessions held by the CCC. There are also some notes and minutes of meetings, material from other contemporary organizations, and reference material. There is very little correspondence.
The papers in this subseries are arranged with the policy, program and financial records placed first, followed by files pertaining to internal matters and controversies within the organization. Files dealing with relationships with other groups are placed next, arranged alphabetically by name.

This subseries consists of papers centered on efforts in the early seventies to create a new mass party to replace the Communist Party USA, which would reflect the ideological position of the New Left revolutionaries whose numbers had grown as a result of the activism of the sixties.

In Detroit, most of the members of GAD plus many of the members of the LRBW and MCLL were affiliated with the Communist League, which had been formed in 1970 to succeed the California Communist League organized two years earlier. For the next four years an intense discussion took place among members of the Communist League (CL) and other Communist groups on the form that a new mass party should take and the exact philosophy it should espouse. In 1974 the CL formed itself into the Communist Labor Party (CLP) to serve as a new mass party. Different mass parties were formed in the seventies by other Communist groups.

The material in this subseries consists largely of reports, position papers and memoranda. There is some correspondence, and some reference material used in preparing reports and for education in the cadre schools.

In this subseries, papers concerned with discussions regarding the formation of a new Marxist-Leninist mass party are placed first. These are mainly from the National Interim Committee and the Continuations Committee. This is followed by material from the Midwest Regional Cadre School held in 1974: course outlines, discussions, and reading material.

The next section is made up of papers from the CL, mainly reports on a variety of subjects and on Marxism. This is followed by correspondence with Dan Georgakas and Marvin Surkin concerned with the CL, formation of the CLP, the Detroit Unemployed Council and their book, Detroit: I Do Mind Dying. The Detroit Unemployed Council (DUC) was an organization of working class groups sponsored by the CLP, formed to agitate for action on unemployment which was at a high level in Detroit in 1974 and 1975.

The final portion of this subseries is made up of CLP committee reports and reports on a variety of subjects arranged alphabetically. Some literature from other revolutionary organizations is included in this section.
