Mildred "Millie" Jeffrey was born in Alton, Iowa on December 29, 1910 into a family of independent, hardworking women. Her grandmother ran the family farm and raised sixteen children after her husband died. Her mother, Bertha McWilliams, who raised Milly, the oldest, and six other children, became Iowa's first female registered pharmacist in 1908 and owned a drugstore in Alton and later in Minneapolis.

Ms. Jeffrey's campaign against social injustice began in 1928 when she joined the left-leaning Women's International League for Peace and Freedom and the YWCA while a student at the University of Minnesota. The Y, which organized interracial dances, hosted controversial speakers, and attempted to integrate restaurants, had a reputation as one of the most radical student groups on campus. After graduating in 1932, she attended Bryn Mawr College, receiving a master's degree from the Department of Social Economy and Social Research in 1934.

She worked for the next year as a special investigator for the National Recovery Administration and then took a job organizing for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America in Philadelphia, trying to recruit as many millworkers as possible before the inevitable firing or arrest. Eventually, she became educational director of the Pennsylvania Joint Board of Shirt Workers. In 1936, she married fellow Amalgamated organizer Homer Newman Jeffrey, and the two of them traveled throughout the South and East organizing textile workers. During World War II, the Jeffreys both worked in Washington as consultants to the War Labor Board, where they became close friends with the Reuther brothers.

When Mildred and Newman Jeffrey moved to Detroit in 1944, Victor Reuther offered her a job as director of the newly formed UAW Women's Bureau; she reluctantly accepted only after a neighbor agreed to care for her two young children. As the UAW's first female department head, Mildred Jeffrey gained a forum for her lifelong commitment to equal rights for women not only in society and the workplace, but in the union as well. She organized the first UAW women's conference in response to the massive postwar layoffs of women production workers replaced by returning veterans. From 1949 until 1954, she ran the union's radio station, after which she moved on to direct the Community Relations Department. Her last post with the UAW was as Director of the Consumer Affairs Department from 1968 until her retirement in 1976.

Mildred Jeffrey had been active in Democratic Party politics from the time she arrived in Detroit, serving as a precinct delegate, state central committee member, and national committeewoman. Preferring to spend her energy on the grunt work of politics -- leafleting, organizing, telephone canvassing, and fundraising -- she did not run for public office until 1974, when she was elected to the Wayne State University Board of Governors, an office she held for sixteen years.

Her commitment to equal rights for women and minorities did not abate after her retirement from the UAW in 1976. As early as 1948 she began campaigning for the passage of the Equal Rights Amendment. As a founding member and chair of the National Women's Political Caucus, NOW's political arm, she supported female candidates for public office and was an original board member of the Michigan Women's Foundation. In seeking social justice and equality for all people, Mildred Jeffrey has spent a lifetime in committee and organizational work on behalf of civil rights, education, health care, youth employment, and recreation issues.

The papers of Mildred Jeffrey consist of correspondence, reports, minutes, speeches, UAW convention materials, clippings, articles, and political, labor, and feminist publications. Related material may be found in the UAW Community Relations Department: Mildred Jeffrey Collection. A transcript of an oral interview with Mildred Jeffrey may be found in the 20th Century Trade Union Woman series of oral histories on deposit at the Reuther Library.

Abstract

This second part of the papers of Mildred Jeffrey contains documents primarily from the last 30 years of her life, from the 1970s until 2004. During those years, Jeffrey became an activist in the many social and political movements of the time, including women's rights, civil rights, reproductive rights and peace. Her papers include documents and correspondence from the many organizations in which she was involved as well as wide-ranging correspondence with family, friends, colleagues and notable persons, including politicians, several presidents and members of the Kennedy family. Jeffrey served as a member of the Michigan Democratic Party State Central Committee and the Democratic National Committee and was actively involved in the campaigns of many state and national candidates, including presidential and congressional races, particularly supporting women candidates. On the national level, Jeffrey was a delegate to eight presidential nominating conventions and played a key role in convincing Walter Mondale to name Geraldine Ferraro as his running mate in 1984. In Michigan, Jeffrey was a crucial actor in the campaigns of Debbie Stabenow, Carolyn Cheeks Kilpatrick and Jennifer Granholm, among others.

Jeffrey played major leadership roles in the National Women's Political Caucus (founder and president), the Coalition of Labor Union Women, Americans for Democratic Action, the National Abortion Rights Action League, the Michigan Women's Foundation and many other organizations. She was elected to the Board of Governors of Wayne State University in 1974 and served for sixteen years, including three as board chairperson. Other organizations for which she served as a board member include the Michigan Peer Review Organization, Merrill Palmer Institute, Blue Cross/Blue Shield of Michigan and the Michigan Coalition for Human Rights. Beginning in the 1970s, Jeffrey traveled widely as a speaker, organizer and delegate for many national and international labor and women's conferences, including the UN World Conference on Women held in Beijing in 1995. Her numerous recognitions and awards include the Presidential Medal of Freedom (awarded by President Bill Clinton), an honorary degree from Ohio Wesleyan University, and awards from the ACLU, the ADA, the Detroit Urban League, the Association of Governing Boards of Universities and Colleges and many other organizations. She received many achievement awards, including those from the Anti-Defamation League, the Michigan Women's Foundation, NOW, and the Michigan Women's Hall of Fame. Documents from these organizations, events and Jeffrey's travels are included in this collection.
