The Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employes (BMWE) was founded at Demopolis, Alabama, in July, 1887 under the name of the Order of Railroad Trackmen with John T. Wilson as its first president. At first, membership was restricted to track foremen, but within a few years it broadened its jurisdiction to include all workers who build and maintain the tracks, bridges, buildings and other structures of the railroads. BMWE became international in scope in 1899, when it amalgamated with a similar organization in Canada. Its Grand Lodge headquarters were permanently established in Detroit, Michigan in 1913, but it wasn't until 1951 that the Brotherhood constructed its own building on Woodward Avenue in Highland Park, an enclave of Detroit. The Grand Lodge is comprised of System Divisions or Federations, each of which has under its jurisdiction one or more railroad systems and the Subordinate Lodges located on those systems.

The first local chapter of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the BMWE was organized at Macon, Georgia in 1898, prior to the formation of the Grand Lodge of the Auxiliary at the 1902 convention of the Brotherhood. Funding problems forced the discontinuance of the auxiliaries during World War I, but they reappeared with renewed vigor during the 1920s, when both the Denver and Twin Cities (Minneapolis/St. Paul) Auxiliaries, minutes of whose meetings form part of this collection, were chartered.

The Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employes Collection consists primarily of outgoing presidential correspondence for the years 1899-1900 and 1912-1914, preserved in letterpress copybooks, Grand Executive Committee meeting minutes and proceedings for the years 1918-1920, including those documenting the resignations of President A. E. Barker and Secretary-Treasurer, George Seal, and BMWE Ladies' Auxiliary convention proceedings as well as minutes and correspondence of the Denver and Twin Cities (Minneapolis/St. Paul) Auxiliaries.

Abstract

A history of the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees (BMWE) from its founding in 1887 through 2004, can be found at in Part 1 of this finding aid. In 2004, the BMWE merged with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, to become the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees Division of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters.

Part 2 of the records of the BMWE are a comprehensive documentation of the organization's activities related to the growth and decline of railroad systems on an international, national and divisional scale. Organizational documentation includes governing documents, correspondence to and from Presidents and union members, and agreements from 1906-2004, which give insight into a union that at one time had more than 350,000 members. Records specifically document the organization's founding and history, its administration, and the evolving activities of its members.
