History

The National Association of Letter Carriers' Information Center, located at NALC headquarters in Washington, DC, is the result of efforts by NALC research director F. John Miller to create a collection of material to support research activities and meet the information and educational needs of the officers and staff. By the early 1980s, Miller had developed a comprehensive collection of publications and resource materials generated by various NALC offices, the U.S. Postal Service, the U.S. Government, and other miscellaneous sources. This collection was referred to as "the library."

In 1984, the position of information specialist/researcher was created and librarian Candace Main (later known as Candace Main Rush) was hired to organize the library material and develop an up-to-date, computerized, well-functioning research facility and repository. In 1986, with the completion of these tasks, the library was formally named the NALC Information Center. Main Rush was later named director, responsible for collection development and maintenance, reference and research services, and NALC records management.

The primary mandate of the NALC Information Center is to provide the most current and relevant information materials possible to support the work of officers and staff on behalf of the members. Current information is gathered and disseminated, historical documents are consolidated and preserved, and vital NALC records are maintained. The Information Center answers reference requests from NALC officers, staff and members—some leading to lengthy research projects—and responds to basic inquiries from individuals, students, academic researchers, and educational institutions.

The Information Center often works closely with the NALC research department on issues of importance to the union, such as collective bargaining, national-level arbitration cases and, most notably, preparations for the union's 1989 Centennial Celebration.

Candace Main Rush received a Bachelor of Arts degree in history from DePauw in 1971; a Master of Arts degree in history from Tufts University in 1973, and a Master's degree in Library Science from Simmons College in 1974.

Prior to her work with NALC, Main Rush was assistant librarian at the Southbury, CN Public Library. Earlier in her career she was employed by the Kearsarge, NH School District, provided indexing services for Research Publications, Inc. in Woodbridge, CN, and worked as a freelance indexer and abstractor for publishers in NY and CN. Main Rush retired from NALC in 2005.
