History

Flora Suhd Hommel was one of the pioneers who brought the Lamaze psychoprophylactic method of painless childbirth to the United States, establishing an important teaching organization in Detroit, the Childbirth Without Pain Education Association (CWPEA). She championed the rights of women to control childbirth, creating a grass-roots movement contemporaneous with the women's movement of the 1960s-1970s. Flora Suhd was born in Detroit on March 16, 1928. Her career began with training from Dr. Pierre Vellay and Dr. Fernand Lamaze, while living in France from 1946-1953. She returned to Detroit and received a bachelor's degree in nursing from Wayne State University in 1958. The CWPEA was established that same year and continued into the 1990s, training thousands of expectant parents (over 17,000 according to one 1989 report) in the methods of painless childbirth and hundreds of teachers and birth coaches (called monitrices). It was incorporated as a non-profit educational and scientific institution in 1964. As the CWPEA's executive director, Hommel supervised a large core of volunteers (most of them former childbirth students), oversaw an extensive schedule of classes and film showings, trained teachers and monitrices, worked with the medical establishment to bring the new childbirth methods into hospitals, and attempted to establish the CWPEA's own birthing center in the 1980s (it was never realized).

Hommel and the CWPEA were important catalysts in establishing similar childbirth and parenting organizations and teacher-monitrice accreditation programs across the United States. She served as a consultant and lectured extensively to childbirth, parenting and medical workshops and conferences across the U.S, and was a prominent member of the International Childbirth Education Association (ICEA) and the American Society for Psycho-Prophylaxis in Obstetrics (ASPO, now Lamaze International). From the 1980s on, Hommel was involved with several health care and political organizations, including the Detroit Health Advisory Commission and the Grey Panthers, fighting the "medicalization" of childbirth, the lack of health care for women, the rampant rise in cesarian births, and many other social and political issues facing women, seniors and families. Some of the awards Hommel received during her career include induction into the Michigan Women's Hall of Fame, Wayne State University's "Detroit Distinguished Women" award, a key to the City of Detroit awarded by Mayor Coleman Young in 1973 and Honorary Life Membership in the International Society of Psychoprophylaxis in Obstetrics.

Scope and Content

Hommel's papers reflect her career working with the Lamaze method. Most of the collection is comprised of CWPEA documents and correspondence from its establishment through the 1990s-- records of events, classes and projects, including the birthing center and the making of an American version of the well-respected French childbirth film "Naissance." Of particular interest may be the many birth reports— extensive narrations of the birth experiences of CWPEA students. There is substantial overlap between correspondence in Hommel's personal papers and the CWPEA correspondence. A sampling of newsletters and documents from national childbirth and parenting organizations is included in the papers. Several boxes of ICEA materials and a small amount of ASPO materials are located in Series III.
