Abstract:	Children's Hospital of Michigan was conceived and founded in 1886 as the Children's Free Hospital Association after a general practitioner, Dr. Charles Devendorf, realized that there were no facilities in the Detroit community which provided for the medical care of sick children of indigent parents. He sought the support of a group of socially prominent women whom he asked to provide funds to subsidize "free beds" for the care of such children. They began with just twelve beds at Harper Hospital in the Nancy Harper Ward. In keeping with Detroit's industrial growth, however, the hospital has steadily increased in size and prominence as time went on. Today the hospital is a proud member of the Detroit Medical Center, with 228 beds; internationally renowned research and training facilities; and numerous outpatient, specialty and rehabilitation centers in the Metro Detroit area. Material in this collection related to the history of Children's Hospital of Michigan. The materials included in Part 3 of Children's Hospital of Michigan records document the activities of the hospitals' Board of Trustees; its various administrative committees; and its fundraising efforts, with the bulk of the records dating from between 1970 and 2004. Materials include committee minutes; reports; correspondence; photographs of doctors, patients and special events; and marketing materials.

History

Children's Hospital of Michigan was conceived and founded in 1886 as the Children's Free Hospital Association after a general practitioner, Dr. Charles Devendorf, realized that there were no facilities in the Detroit community which provided for the medical care of sick children of indigent parents.

He sought the support of a group of socially prominent women whom he asked to provide funds to subsidize "free beds" for the care of such children. They began with twelve beds at Harper Hospital in the Nancy Harper Ward and in two years had expanded to 34 endowed beds. An additional ward was made available on another floor at Harper Hospital for the care and isolation of children with contagious diseases.

By 1890 the hospital moved to the Caskey House at Fort and Seventh Streets. Later, an adjacent house, the Pope House, was leased and became the contagious disease hospital, and a large nearby barn was annexed and functioned as an outdoor dispensary.

In 1893, when they had outgrown these facilities, the Association approached Mr. Hiram Walker for funds with which to build a Children's Free Hospital. Several Detroit physicians, and the Board of Trustees of the Children's Free Hospital Association persuaded Mr. Walker to buy land and contribute $125,000 for the new hospital. He stipulated that $65,000 be allocated for the new building and the remaining money be set aside to support hospital operations and accumulate interest for additions to the structure. In June, 1896, the new building, situated at St. Antoine and Farnsworth, was dedicated.

While operating in the new building the Training School for Nursemaids was begun. By 1915 a Training School for Nurses was established, along with a Social Service Department, Physical Therapy Department and a Dental Clinic.

With the industrial growth of Detroit, Children' Free Hospital had further critical need for space for patients and for development of services. James Couzens agreed to give a $1,000,000 building fund if the Association would merge with the Michigan Hospital School in Farmington, to which he had given an annual contribution. This was done, and in 1922 the Children's Hospital of Michigan was adopted as the name of the new corporation. The Michigan Hospital School then became the Michigan Convalescent Home. The building program was begun in 1922 and completed by 1927. Mr. Couzens also stipulated that services must not be limited to the indigent, but open to all children and their doctors.

Rapid growth and development followed. In 1922 the research laboratories of the Merrill-Palmer School were located at Children's Hospital. Dr. Icie Macy Hoobler headed the laboratories at Children's Hospital, focusing her research on children's nutrition and chemical growth processes. In 1925 The Children's Fund of Michigan was organized and began its program of cooperative research with the hospital. In 1954, the Children's Fund was replaced by the Children's Research Center to continue scientific research in pediatric medicine.

In 1957, Children's Hospital became affiliated with the Wayne State University College of Medicine for teaching purposes. Wayne faculty in pediatrics, surgery for children and research in children's diseases carried full-time staff assignments at the hospital.

Starting in the late 1950s, through many extensive fund raising campaigns, the hospital was able to expand its services, including the construction of a new complex located within the Medical Center area on Beaubien Boulevard. In March of 1971, the new complex was dedicated.
