Abstract:	Tracy W. McGregor and Katherine Whitney McGregor established the McGregor Fund in 1925 to ensure that their financial resources would continue to be used for social, educational, and charitable programs. Both of the McGregors were lifelong philanthropists, with Tracy heading a mission for the homeless from 1891 to 1936 and Katherine volunteering at numerous organizations, establishing an orphanage and facility for the aid of young mothers, and donating extensively to a number of local charities. History

Tracy W. McGregor (1869-1936) and Katherine Whitney McGregor (1873-1954) established the McGregor Fund in 1925 to ensure that their financial resources would continue to be used for social, educational, and charitable programs. Both of the McGregors were lifelong philanthropists, with Tracy heading a mission for the homeless in Detroit from 1891 to 1936 and Katherine volunteering at numerous Detroit organizations, establishing an orphanage and facility for the aid of young mothers, and donating extensively to a number of local charities. They established the McGregor Fund in 1925 to act as a grant-making organization with priorities including higher education, youth services, health care and science. During his lifetime, Tracy McGregor was involved in numerous social service organizations, including Provident Loan and Savings Society, the Detroit Community Fund, the Wayne Country Training School and the Merrill Palmer Institute, to name just a few. He also helped establish and administer scholarly organizations such as the Clements Library at the University of Michigan and the McGregor Library at the University of Virginia. Katherine McGregor and the McGregor Fund Trustees continued and expanded his work after his death. The McGregors' legacy continues into the 21st century as the McGregor Fund provides "financial assistance to nonprofit emergency human service agencies and health care programs, especially for low-income individuals and innovative educational and cultural initiatives." (P. Mason)
