Abstract:	During the academic year 1967-1968 Wayne State University celebrated the hundredth anniversary of its founding. As part of the commemoration, the University sponsored a series of symposia of national significance under the theme, "The University and Urban Society." Broadly, the Symposia theme dealt with the urban university and its impact on, and responsibilities to, its urban community. More specifically, the focus of the Symposia was an examination of the problems and issues associated with an increasingly urban society. The Collection consists primarily of the records of Edward Lurie, Wayne State University professor of history, who served as director of the Centennial Symposia, and his assistant, Philip Borden.

History

The Centennial Symposia theme dealt with the urban university and its impact on, and responsibilities to, its urban community. Seven primary symposia, each dealing with a particular aspect of the central theme, and each of two-to five-days' duration, were held between October of 1967 and June of 1968. Topics included housing, health and welfare, technology, the physical environment, governing and planning, and culture and education -- emphasizing the physical and mental adaptation of citizens to the problems posed by urbanization. In response to the 1967 Detroit civil unrest, one symposium was devoted to an examination of problems of racism and violence, and the events leading to the unrest. Community leaders and nationally recognized experts and scholars were invited to present papers, and partake in discussion of the Symposia topics.

CENTENNIAL SYMPOSIA COLLECTION

Papers, 1966-1968
(Predominantly, 1967-1968)

4.5 linear feet

Accession Number 186
L. C. Number

The papers of the Centennial Symposia Collection were placed in the Wayne State University Archives by Edward Lurie, director of the Centennial Symposia. The papers were opened for research in April of 1989.

During the academic year 1967-68 Wayne State University celebrated the hundredth anniversary of its founding. As part of the commemoration, the university sponsored a series of symposia of national significance under the theme "The University and Urban Society."

Broadly, the Symposia theme dealt with the urban university and its impact on, and responsibilities to, its urban community. More specifically, the focus of the Symposia was an examination of the problems and issues associated with an increasingly urban society. Seven primary symposia, each dealing with a particular aspect of the central theme, and each of two- to five-days' duration, were held between October of 1967 and June of 1968. Topics included housing, health and welfare, technology, the physical environment, governing and planning, and culture and education -- emphasizing the physical and mental adaptation of man to the problems posed by urbanization. In response to the Detroit riots of 1967, one symposium was devoted to an examination of problems of racism and violence, and the events leading to those riots. Community leaders and nationally-recognized experts and scholars were invited to present papers, and partake in discussion of the Symposia topics.

The collection consists primarily of the records of Edward Lurie, WSU professor of history, who served as director of the Centennial Symposia, and his assistant, Philip Borden. Internal correspondents include Professor of History Raymond C. Miller and Vice President for University Relations George E. Gullen, Jr., Centennial Commission co-chairmen; Centennial Symposia Executive Committee members: Vice President for Student Affairs James P. McCormick, University Center for Adult Education Director Milton Stern, Urban Extension Dean Hamilton Stillwell, and Professor of Economics Wilbur Thompson; Centennial Symposia Committee chairmen Richard Bilaitis, Joseph P. Hourihan, Herbert K. Livingston, Hubert Locke, Leonard Stitelman, and Richard Wisniewski. The newly-created Center for Urban Studies, with Professor Ronald W. Haughton as acting director, took part in the planning of the Symposia. External correspondents include experts from the various fields under discussion by the Symposia. Correspondence with Symposia participants can be found in Boxes 4 and 5 under "participant files." Discussion of prospective participants can be found throughout the collection.

The records cover the total planning of the Symposia -- from initial concept through implementation and final reports -- covering the time period of 1967 through 1968, with some slightly earlier material. The collection displays the development and refinement of the conference themes and programs, and the process of speaker/participant selection. Many of the schedules found in the collection are undated drafts and may not be the final Symposia programs.

The seven primary symposia titles, dates, and topics of examination are:

New Perspectives on Race and the City, October 19-21, 1967

The impact of race upon urban transformation, with emphasis upon Detroit and the role of the university in analyzing and aiding the restructuring of traditional urban patterns.

The Urban University: Responsibilities and Choices, November 6-7, 1967

The urban university's relationships with faculty, student, metropolitan and national communities.

The City as Environment: Biological and Social Implications, November 16-17, 1967

Psychological, economic, and somatic stresses upon the individual resulting from urban environmental forces.

Extending the Life Span: The Impact on Man, February 15-16, 1968

The implications of increased longevity for medicine, society, and the dignity of man in the urban setting, with emphasis upon the research and educational responsibilities of the university.

Power versus Plan: Prospects for Urban Government, March 14-15, 1968

The impacts of urban growth, the federal government, and institutional forces upon planning, human values, and the nature of decision making in the metropolitan region.

Technology and the City: Human and Social Dimensions, May 6-10, 1968

scientific, psychological, and social impacts of transportation, energy, communication upon the present and future condition of man in urban society.

The City of Man: The University and Urban Culture, May 15-17, 1968

The roles of the urban university in relation to the performing arts, the visual arts, and architecture in the city visual arts, and architecture in the city

Also included is some correspondence relating to the following subsidiary programs:

- The Student Centennial Conference on the Experimental College
- Urban Journalism in the 21st Century
- Mathematics Semigroups Conference

Some of the addresses presented at the Symposia are included (see 6:11-17); transcripts of the some of the proceedings can be found in 7:24-25. Other addresses and papers on related topics or by participants or prospective participants may be found in Series III; in background information (2:9-12); in the participant files (4:18-5:25); and throughout the collection.

In addition to topics addressed by the Symposia, other significant subjects found in the collection include the creation of the Center for Urban Studies, a concern among Black leaders about the low number of Black conference participants, and a boycott of the Symposia.

An index to subjects and correspondence will be found on pages 12-13.

Contents

9 manuscript boxes

- Series I, Centennial Symposia General Files, 1966-1968, Boxes 1-6
Correspondence, reports, budgets and news clippings relating to the overall planning and administration of the Symposia. Included are discussion of symposia topics and participants, participant correspondence, participant/guest lists, and copies of many of the addresses presented at the Symposia.
- Series II, Spring Planning Conference, 1967, Box 7
Correspondence, reports, participant lists and completed questionnaires relating to this preliminary conference at which over 240 scholars, governmental and community leaders and Wayne State faculty met to plan the form of the Centennial Symposia.
- Series III, Symposia, 1967-1968, Boxes 8-9
Correspondence, reports and participant/guest lists relating to the planning of the individual symposia. Represented are the seven primary symposia and some material relating to the planning of some of the subsidiary conferences and activities of the centennial celebration.

Series I
Centennial Symposia General Files, 1966-1968
Boxes 1-6

Series I contains correspondence, reports, schedules, minutes, budgets, press releases and news clippings relating to the overall planning and administration of the Centennial Symposia. Included are correspondence with invited speakers (4:18-5:25), participant/guest lists (5:26-34), and correspondence and reports discussing symposia themes and prospective speakers/participants. Additional guest lists and program-development documentation can be found in Series II and III. Also included in Series I are copies of many of the addresses presented at the Symposia (6:11-17).

Series I is divided into two groups: chronological files and subject files. Chronological files contain, in general, copies of correspondence as well as tentative program schedules and outlines, arranged by date of creation, from June 1967 through February 1968. Copies of much of this material can also be found in the subject files.

The subject file folders are arranged alphabetically by subject or folder title. Folder titles used are those composed by the Centennial Symposia staff, except in cases where those titles would not be sufficiently informative to the reader. Material within each folder is arranged chronologically, with undated material first.

Calendar of Events files (Box 3) contain programs for many on-campus and off-campus events and include many tentative symposia program drafts. These are filed by their date of preparation, when known, rather than by the date of the event.

Participant files (Boxes 4-5) include correspondence with those invited speakers/participants who agreed to take part, or were influential in the program. Many of the participant files include biographical sketches, some with photographs.

Drafts of the Symposia program outlines can be found in the chronological files, in Calendar of Events (3:4-10), Symposia Planning (6:26-28), and throughout the collection.
